The hill before mentioned rissing abruptly from this position was thickly interspersed with sagebrush and thick bashes, affording a temporary hiding place for the fugitive. As the evening were an, the pairons of the saloon become more numerous, while the chillings of the atmosphere caused those most interested in the games at the table to gather round the fire. The conversation, which at this time was becoming animated, was anddenly interrupted by nest interested in the games at the table nest interested in the games at the table to gather round the fire. The conversa-tion, which at this time was becoming animated, was suddenly interrupted by the entrance of a tall, raw-boned Yankee, in his hand a long rifle; around his waist he wore a belt, from which was suspended a powder flask and bullet

Something is wrong in those families where the little courtesies of speech are ignored in the every-day home life. True politeness can not be learned, like a lesson, by one effort, any time in one's life; it must be inbred. "Well-meaning, but rough," is said of many a man; and too often the beginning of the difficulty lies with the parents in a family. Is it his ampers on his evening return home? Its it more difficult for the mother to say, "John, will you shut the door, please?" than to use the laconic phrase, "Shut the door!" When Tom knocks over his sister's baby-house, why should not "Excuse me, I didn't mean to," be the instinctive applies?

Many who would not be guilty of discourtesy to a stranger, or to a friend in the world without, lay aside much if not y ordered hither and thither with crusty words; no "Thank you" rewards the little tircless feet that run on countless

In many families there is no positive rudeness among the members, only a lack of those simple affectionate attentions which awaken a spontaneous return; a of those simple affectionate attentions which awaken a spontaneous return; a want of that consideration and gentleness of demeanor of which are well-springs of comfort in every household. The well-bred host does not fail to bid his goest "Good-night" and "Good-morning;" why should not this simple expression of good feeling be always exchanged between parents and children? The kindly morning greeting will often mp in the bud some rising fretfulness; and the pleasant "Good-by" from old and young, when leaving the house for office, shop and school, is a fragant memory through the day of separation. When the family gather alone around breakfast or dinner table, the same courtesy should prevail as if guests were present. Reproof, complaint, unpleasant discussion and scandal, no less than moody silence, should be banished. Let the conversation be genial, and suited to the little folks as far as possible. Interesting incidents of the day's experience may be mentioned at the evening meal, thus arousing the social element. If resources fail, sometimes little bits read aloud from the morning or evening paper will kindle the conversation.

No pleasanter sight is there than a family of young folks who are quick to perform little acts of attention to their elders. The placing of the big arm-chair which was situate at one end, with a large adobe fireplace on the other end, nearly opposite to the entrance. On the large stone hearth burned a wood fire, giving to the room a cheerful appearance. On the firm, was a well-filled bar, around which were congregated representatives of different nations, some speculating on the success of various mining operations, while others were discussing the general topics of the day. Along the rear side side of the room extended a row of tables, around each of which was seated a company of miners playing poker and staking large sums of gold with as much coolness and apparent unconcern as if they were partaking of their evening meal. A few rude seats occupied the spice around the fireplace, and in the front portion of the room beyond the first portion of the room part of the big arm-chair in a warm place for mamma, running for a footstool for annty, hunting up paga's spectacles, and scores of liftle deeds show unsuppressed and loving hearts. But if mamma never roturns a smiling "Thank you, deer," if papa's "Just what I was wanting. Sunic," does not indicate that the little attention is appreciated, the children soon drop the faither stoops to pick it up, bright eyes will see the act, and quick minds make a note of it. By example, a thousand times more quickly than by precipit the proposition of the room beyond the first papers. vors, to be gentle and unsetists, to be thoughtful and considerate of the com-fort of the family. The boys, with in-ward pride of their father's courteens demeanor, will be chivairous and help-ful to their young sisters; the girls, imi-tating the mother will be centle and re-able. A serious word in private will generally cure a fault more easily than many public criticisms. In some families a spirit of contradiction and discussion mars the harmony, every statement is, as it were, dissected, and the absolute correctness of every word calculated. It interferes scriously with social freedom when unimportant inaccuracies are watched for, and exposed for the mere sake of exposure. Brothers and sisters sometimes acquire an almost unconscious habit of teasing each other, half in earnest, half in fun. This is particularly uncomfortable for everybody else, whatever doubtful pleasure the parties themselves may experience.

In the home where true courtesy prevails, it seems to meet you on the very threshold. You feel the kindly welcome on entering. No rade eyes scan your dress. No anilen children are sent from the room. No peremptory orders are given to cover the delinquencies of housekeepers or servants. A delightful atmosphere prevades the house—unmistakable yet indescribable.—[Bazar.

Then taking from his side the flask, he unscrowed the cap from the top, and parently fine Hozard powder, then pourous it carefully back, he replaced the cop, and screwing it firmly on, yelled.

"Yes, I will die myself, and all around me shall the also."

He then flung the flask on the burning coals. The tunnit that followed was indescribable. The rush for the door was almost simultaneous with the rash act of the stranger. The windows served as a means of escape to those who were unable to press a passage through the lace."

a CALIFORNIA STORY.

Is the early mining days of California there stood at the foot of the hill, not many miles from Nevada, one of those rough-built gaming houses so common inroughout the mining sections of the territory. A description of this structure and its surroundings will convey to the reader a better idea of the incident 1 am about to relate. The building contained but one room, the entrance to which was situate at one end, with a large adobe fireplace on the other end, nearly opposite to the entrance. On the large stone hearth burned a wood fire, giving to the room a cheerful appear-front portion of the room beyond the bar. The cabins of the settlers extend-ed some distance to the front of the spot, while the unsettled portion of the country lay in the rear.

The hill before mentioned rising ab-

Advancing to the fire-place, he deposited his ride in the corner, and after accepting the seat courteously offered him by one of the company, he seated inmeelf by the fire, resting one elbow on his lines, and dropping his chin into his hard, he sat gloomily watching the fire, as if some mighty grief were preying upon him. He mumbled, incoherently at times, and sat without changing his position. The attention of the company was soon drawn to the stranger, and an emparational glance from those at the table
